Micah Doctor of Ministry in Transformational Leadership and Organizing

Micah Doctor of Ministry
To fulfill part of the mission of the Micah Institute to educate for justice, the Micah Institute/NYTS Doctor of Ministry in Transformational Leadership and Organizing, the first of its genre, was created. This three-year degree program is designed to empower students to work alongside the disenfranchised and to champion local and global injustices. Each year, 10 students will be admitted to the doctoral degree program to focus on faith-rooted organizing as a strategy to make an impact on local, national or global issues of social justice concern.

Students will engage in intensive theological study at the doctoral level and will be required to defend a demonstration project that will have a significant impact on an issue affecting poor and disenfranchised communities. Students will also be required to produce and maintain a justice communications network that will include monthly newsletters, list-serves and social network postings. This exciting work has already begun with the inaugural class of religious and community leaders who were orientated in the October 2010 during a one-week intensive study.
